FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

SUNDAY BLOODY SUNDAY: Indigenous Family Demands Justice After 5 Years of Government Abandonment

Federal and Provincial Officials Ghosted Constituent Pleas for Help with Child Protection System Failures

[CITY, PROVINCE] – April 4, 2026 – An Indigenous family is launching a comprehensive public accountability campaign after five years of systemic failures by Canadian government agencies at federal, provincial, and municipal levels.

The campaign, titled “Sunday Bloody Sunday, Part Two: Indigenous Justice Advocacy,” documents how government institutions failed to protect a 14-year-old Indigenous boy from a violent attack, then abandoned the family when seeking help for recovery and justice.

THE INCIDENT: On February 14, 2021, Barran (then 14 years old) was stabbed three times by a stranger at his mother’s residence. The attack could have been prevented—the family had filed 7+ reports with child protection authorities over seven years. None were taken seriously.

THE SYSTEM FAILURE: After the stabbing, the family sought help from government agencies:

- DPJ (Direction de la protection de la jeunesse): Denied mental health support for 14+ months
- IVAC (Crime Victim Compensation): Harassed the family over injury compensation payments
- Solidarité Sociale (Welfare): Contradicted its own disability declarations and demanded re-proof of disability (4th time)
- 500+ Elected Officials: Contacted at federal, provincial, and municipal levels. Only 1 substantive response received.

THE POLITICAL RESPONSE: Instead of helping, government officials:

- MNA Céline Haytayan (CAQ, Laval-des-Rapides): Sent cease-and-desist threat (November 19, 2023) threatening criminal harassment complaint if constituent continued asking for help
- Provincial Ministers: Ghosted all pleas for intervention
- Federal MPs: Ignored escalation requests
- CDPDJ (Quebec Human Rights Commission): Refused investigation 2x

THE CAMPAIGN: The family is now launching a comprehensive public accountability campaign featuring:

- 12-page interactive book with podcast player, radio player, and audio narration (EN/FR/HT)
- Complete documentation of government failures
- UN and ICC complaint templates
- Comprehensive press kit and media materials
- Call to action for justice, accountability, and systemic reform

KEY STATISTICS:

- 5 years since stabbing attack (February 14, 2021 – April 4, 2026)
- 14+ months without mental health support
- 4 times declared handicapped by government
- 7+ years of ignored child protection reports
- 500+ elected officials contacted
- 1 substantive response received
- 194 IVAC transactions scrutinized
- 0 government accountability

QUOTES:

“My son survived the stabbing. But the system that was supposed to protect him failed—before, during, and after. Five years later, we’re still fighting for basic justice and accountability.” – Father

“This is not an isolated incident. It’s systemic. Indigenous families across Canada face the same abandonment, the same silence, the same institutional racism.” – Campaign Spokesperson

“When we asked for help, we were ghosted. When we persisted, we were threatened. This is what government accountability looks like in Canada in 2026.” – Family Member

INTERNATIONAL CONTEXT: The family has filed complaints with:

- United Nations Human Rights Committee (ICCPR violations)

- International Criminal Court (crimes against humanity - systemic child protection failures)

REMEDIES SOUGHT:

1. Independent inquiry into DPJ systemic failures
2. Application of Jordan's Principle (no-delay services for First Nations children)
3. Elimination of immunity laws protecting government workers
4. Compensation for family
5. Public acknowledgment of systemic racism in child protection
6. Training for government workers on Indigenous rights

6. Government worker training on Indigenous rights
7. Establishment of independent DPJ oversight

SECTION 3: BACKGROUND - BARRAN'S STORY

WHO IS BARRAN?

Barran was born in late March 2006 to an Indigenous family in Quebec. He has pre-existing medical conditions requiring ongoing specialist care: paraparesis (paralysis issues), biotinidase deficiency (genetic metabolic disorder), and DNA-related medical conditions.

Despite his disabilities, Barran was a bright, engaged teenager with dreams and potential. He attended school, received medical care from specialists at Montreal Shriners Hospital, and was supported by his family and healthcare providers.

THE ATTACK: FEBRUARY 14, 2021

On Valentine's Day 2021, at just 14 years old, Barran was stabbed three times by a stranger wearing a balaclava at his mother's residence. The attack was violent and traumatic. He survived, but the physical and psychological injuries were severe.

What makes this attack particularly tragic: The family had filed 7+ reports with child protection authorities over seven years. None were taken seriously. The system failed to prevent what could have been prevented.

THE AFTERMATH: SYSTEM ABANDONMENT

After the stabbing, the family desperately sought help:

Medical Care: Individual healthcare providers (Dr. D'Agostino, Christiane Côté, school consultants) showed genuine care and support. But government agencies failed to provide adequate mental health services.

Mental Health Support: Barran needed psychological help for PTSD, nightmares, and trauma. The DPJ denied requests for mental health support for 14+ months. This violated Jordan's Principle—the legal requirement to provide no-delay services to First Nations children.

Financial Support: The family needed emergency assistance for clothing, transportation, and medical costs. Government agencies offered sympathy but no action.

Legal Support: A custody battle for Barran's sister Paisley had been ongoing since September 2019. The legal system moved too slowly to provide emergency protection during the crisis.

FIVE YEARS LATER: STILL FIGHTING

Now 20 years old (just turned 20 in March 2026), Barran continues to fight for justice and accountability. The system that failed him has not changed. Other Indigenous families continue to face the same abandonment, the same silence, the same institutional racism.

SECTION 5: KEY QUOTES

FROM THE FAMILY

“My son survived the stabbing. But the system that was supposed to protect him failed—before, during, and after. Five years later, we’re still fighting for basic justice and accountability.”

“When we asked for help, we were ghosted. When we persisted, we were threatened. This is what government accountability looks like in Canada in 2026.”

“Barran is not alone. Thousands of Indigenous children face the same abandonment, the same silence, the same institutional racism. This campaign is for all of them.”

FROM HEALTHCARE PROVIDERS

“Tell him his occupational therapist is thinking of him and I send him strength and courage to get through these difficult moments.” – Christiane Côté, Occupational Therapist (February 16, 2021)

“I am aware and will pass by to see Barran on the ward on Wednesday.” – Dr. Maria Daniela D’Agostino, Medical Geneticist (February 17, 2021)

“They are beautiful children. You are a very lucky father.” – Deb Kellman, School Consultant (February 25, 2021)

FROM LAWYERS

“I will call you tomorrow! Good luck, my thoughts are with you. This is horrible!” – Julie Gagnon, Lawyer (February 14, 2021)

“I have been fighting for Paisley’s custody since September 2019. We were told we would go to trial soon. It has been delayed since November 2020.” – Alain Gagnon Avocats (January-February 2021)

FROM GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS

“We are sorry for your son’s situation and we wish him all the best. For your questions, I’m still waiting for an answer.” – Ministry of Labour & Social Solidarity (February 16-22, 2021)

FROM THE CAMPAIGN

“This is not an isolated incident. It’s systemic. Indigenous families across Canada face the same abandonment, the same silence, the same institutional racism. We demand change.”

“Truth and Reconciliation was not a conclusion—it was a beginning that government chose to ignore. Our present will be tomorrow’s history. Those who enabled this abuse are now part of the historical record.”

SECTION 6: FAQ - FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS

ABOUT BARRAN’S ATTACK

Q: When did the attack happen? A: February 14, 2021. Barran was 14 years old.

Q: How many times was he stabbed? A: Three times. The attack was violent and traumatic.

Q: Was the attacker caught? A: [Answer based on police records]

Q: What are Barran’s medical conditions? A: Paraparesis (paralysis issues), biotinidase deficiency (genetic metabolic disorder), and DNA-related medical conditions. He was declared handicapped 4 times by government.

ABOUT THE SYSTEM FAILURE

Q: Could the attack have been prevented? A: Yes. The family filed 7+ reports with child protection authorities over seven years. None were taken seriously.

Q: What is Jordan’s Principle? A: A legal principle requiring no-delay services for First Nations children. The government failed to apply it in Barran’s case.

Q: What is DPJ? A: Direction de la protection de la jeunesse (Quebec child protection agency). They became involved AFTER the attack, not before.

Q: Why didn't the family get mental health support? A: DPJ denied requests for 14+ months. This violated Jordan's Principle and constituted systemic denial of care.

ABOUT THE GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Q: How many officials did the family contact? A: Over 500 at federal, provincial, and municipal levels.

Q: How many responded substantively? A: Only 1.

Q: What happened when they asked for help? A: They were mostly ghosted. When they persisted, they were threatened.

Q: What was the cease-and-desist threat? A: MNA Céline Haytayan sent an official letter (November 19, 2023) threatening a criminal harassment complaint if the constituent continued asking for help.

Q: Is that legal? A: No. It violates the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms s.2(b) - freedom of expression. It's also a chilling effect on democratic participation.

ABOUT THE FINANCIAL HARASSMENT

Q: What is IVAC? A: Indemnisation des victimes d'actes criminels (Crime Victim Compensation). Barran's father received ~$5,646 in 2024.

Q: Why is Solidarité Sociale scrutinizing the IVAC payment? A: They're demanding justification for 194 transactions, including ones as small as $5. This is harassment of an injured victim and family.

Q: Is that legal? A: No. IVAC compensation is meant to help recovery, not be weaponized against victims.

ABOUT THE CAMPAIGN

Q: What is "Sunday Bloody Sunday, Part Two"? A: A comprehensive public accountability campaign documenting systemic failures and demanding justice.

Q: What does it include? A: Interactive 12-page book (EN/FR/HT), podcast player, radio player, audio narration, press kit, legal documentation, and call to action.

Q: Where can people access it? A: [Your website URL]

Q: How can people help? A: Donate, share on social media, contact elected officials, demand systemic reform.

Q: What are the remedies sought? A: Independent inquiry, application of Jordan's Principle, elimination of immunity laws, compensation, public acknowledgment of systemic racism, government worker training, and independent DPJ oversight.
